Illinois will join a growing number of states that allow CDL applicants to take the written test in Spanish. On July 8, Illinois Secretary of State Alexi Giannoulias announced a new initiative to increase accessibility and address truck and school bus driver shortages by offering a written CDL test and study guide in Spanish. Officials say that testing standards and CDL requirements will not be altered by the Spanish translation, and that applicants must meet all other criteria, including permitting and training requirements, before a CDL is issued. Additionally, all CDL applicants must have U.S. citizenship, legal permanent residency status, or be a non-domiciled driver. Giannoulias says that more than 20 other states offer CDL testing in Spanish, including Maryland, Virginia, Pennsylvania and Texas. Offering the CDL test in Spanish is one of the many steps our office is taking to ensure our services are as accessible and inclusive as possible, Giannoulias said. This change will help qualified individuals whose primary language is Spanish to become licensed drivers and will help us address school bus and truck driver shortages across the state while maintaining stringent testing standards. School bus drivers play a vital part of the education system with eligible families and school children relying on dependable yellow bus service to get to school every day, said Chicago Public Schools (CPS) CEO Pedro Martinez. Allowing bus driver applicants to test in Spanish will help increase access to becoming a bus driver, mitigating the driver shortage that CPS and other school districts have faced over the past few years. It is another step toward getting more eligible students on buses as we start the 2024-25 school year in late August. March 19, 2013 We get many questions at DMVCheatSheets about getting a CDL or Commercial Drivers License. One of the more common questions is do you offer your material in Spanish or any other language? The quick answer is no not at this time. Unlike our auto material, which is offered in Spanish, our CDL material is English only for a simple reason your test will be in English. The commercial driving test is administered in the English language only. This is pursuant to Federal Motor Carrier Safety Administration regulations 391.11(b)(2) and 383.133(5). What this basically says is that the federal government has mandated that you must be able to speak, read and write English to get a CDL license. You also need to be a US citizen and have a social security number, so if you plan on becoming a truck driver or any other commercial driver and you don't speak English, now is the time to learn. If this is the case, why do some states offer their material in other languages? Most states primarily only offer the auto and motorcycle driving handbooks in other languages, the same way we offer our study material for the DMV test in Spanish. Some states, such as CA, do offer their CDL handbooks in Spanish, but the test will still be in English. The Federal Motor Carrier Safety Administration regulations require that the test only be administered in English. On top of being able to read, write and speak English in order to obtain a CDL license, the federal government also requires that applicants be U.S. citizens and possess a Social Security number. Some states do offer the CDL handbook in Spanish; however, all states are required to only offer the test in English. A particular states department of motor vehicles can provide information regarding the availability of other license exams in languages other than English. Ever dreamt of getting behind the wheel of one of these bad boys and hauling some serious cargo? Well, hold on to your Stetson there, buckaroo, because getting a Commercial Driver's License (CDL) in California might involve a bit more than just parallel parking a Barbie Dream Truck. The Great Translation Debate: Speak English or Adios to Your CDL? Now, let's address the elephant in the room, or rather, the elephant-sized truck in the parking lot. Can you waltz into the DMV, seorial sombrero and all, and expect a Spanish-language CDL test? Unfortunately, the answer is no. As of April 2024, California's DMV offers the written knowledge test for CDLs in only a handful of languages, including Spanish, but English is still king. Why the Lingo Lockdown? There are a few reasons for this. The Federal Motor Carrier Safety Administration (FMCSA) has some pretty strict guidelines for CDL holders, and one of them is that you gotta be able to understand traffic signs, regulations, and safety procedures all in English. It's all about ensuring everyone on the road is on the same page, avoiding any confusion that could lead to a situation where you're yelling "Freno! Freno!" at a runaway bus full of tourists. Don't Fret, Fellow Fahrer! There's Still Hope for Your CDL Dreams So, this might seem like a roadblock, but don't ditch your trucker dreams just yet! Here's how you can navigate this linguistic hurdle: Brush Up on Your English: This might be the most obvious solution, but hey, sometimes the classics are the best. There are tons of resources available to help you learn English, from community colleges to online courses. Who knows, you might even become a bilingual trucker, the coolest fish in the trucking pond! The Spanish Study Guide is Your Amigo: The good news is that the California DMV does offer the official CDL handbook, "The Commercial Driver License Handbook," in Spanish [Spanish California CDL Handbook]. This is a fantastic resource to study the rules of the road, even if the actual test is in English. Knowledge is power, as they say, and knowing the Spanish equivalent of "Yield" will definitely help you on the road to CDL success. Find a Tutor or Translation Buddy: Maybe you're a whiz at memorizing traffic signs but deciphering written English is a struggle. Consider finding a friend or tutor who can help you translate the study materials and explain any confusing concepts. So, the answer is, while you can't take the CDL test entirely in Spanish in California, there are ways to overcome this hurdle and achieve your dream of piloting a giant metal beast. With some dedication, a dash of Spanglish, and maybe a sombrero for good luck, you'll be cruising down the highway in no time!
